What's the Buzz About Kevin Smith's Green Hornet

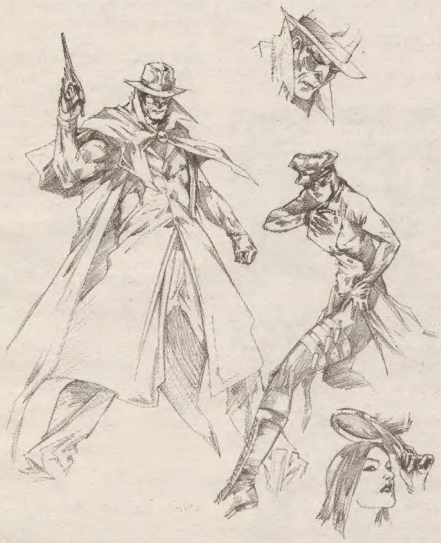
The fact that the Green Hornet is returning to comics is noteworthy in itself. After all, the hero whose career spans more than two-thirds of a century is still fondly remembered by fans old and new. But add star writer Kevin Smith to the mix and the story becomes major news indeed!

Kevin Smith's Green Hornet is the first of three Green Hornet projects in the works from Nick Barrucci's Dynamite Entertainment. The publisher landed the rights to the property after lengthy and complex negotiations. "There was a lot of competition for this!" Barrucci said. "We were after this license for four years! The licensor's attorney was very polite, very patient and we would call him like clockwork every other month and he would tell us until the movie was moving forward, they would not sign an agreement for publishing.

"Therefore, we waited and waited and waited, pushed, pushed, pushed and finally were able to sign the agreement for the Green Hornet. We know that many of our friends at Dark Horse, IDW, and other publishing houses wanted the license, and we had a lot of competition for it. When we got the license as a matter of fact, Steve Rotterdam at DC personally congratulated me, so I believe (but don't know for sure as I never asked—but I appreciated the congrats) there may have even been interest from DC. Green Hornet is a great character; how could you not want him? We persisted and we were fortunate enough to get it."

Landing the character rights was a publishing coup—but landing Kevin Smith as writer was even bigger. Barrucci explained how it came about. "You know what they say, 'How do you get to Carnegie Hall? Practice.' I asked, since I knew he had a passion for the character—and he said yes. I honestly did not think he would want to with his schedule.



"We're very fortunate that Kevin has so much passion for his fans. He's a great guy. There is a lot more to the story, as there always is—but ultimately what fans care about is I asked, he liked the idea, and he said yes. It's wonderful; I'm loving every minute of it. This is also a passion project for us, so we're very fortunate that Kevin's writing is so reverent.

"It's too bad they didn't end up making Kevin's movie," Dynamite editor Joseph Rybandt said, "because it's really great. It's too bad for some, that is—but not for us and our readers, as they'll get to experience it through us in 2010! In fact, they might enjoy our comic even more than they would have had the film been made, as we have the equivalent of an unlimited effects budget."

"That's right," Barrucci continued. "In a way, fans get two movies this year: the unseen movie-in-comics-form from Kevin Smith and the upcoming movie from Sony with Seth Rogen. It's the year of the Hornet!"

The Green Hornet's comic book heritage dates back seventy years; how will Dynamite make the character successful in today's market? "Actually, you try to not reinvent the wheel entirely," Barrucci said. "You try to make him contemporary to today's audience, the same as we've done with characters from Red Sonja to Lone Ranger to the heroes of Project Superpowers. You make them as relevant as you can, you bring in the best creative team possible, and you give it your all.

"We're very fortunate that we're launching with the Kevin Smith series, Kevin has put more passion into this than I could have hoped for. His reverence for the material is second to none, and we're very happy to have Kevin's scripts for the entire series in hand already. The artist is going to be Jonathan Lau, who has worked with us on The Black Terror and who is doing excellent work himself. He's a fantastic artist, absolutely fantastic, and we love working with him."

"Anyone who's seen his most recent work on our Black Terror series will be especially pleased with this news," Rybandt continued. "Jonathan is a real talent and this will be a real game-changer for him when people get a look at the world he's helping to create here."

Rybandt stressed that Dynamite does not view this as a nostalgia project. "A lot of previous Green Hornet comics are very much 'of their time'—not bad comics, but not the sort of book we want to do today. As a publisher, our vision is to fit the best creators with the right property; we've done it so far with Red Sonja, The Lone Ranger, and Zorro, and now The Green Hornet – we're not just cranking out licensed comics and hoping the license brings in the reader to us. We realize it's a combination on concept and creative talent that makes it work in the end."

In addition to interior artist Jonathan Lau, Dynamite has put together an incredible team of cover artists and designers—Alex Ross, John Cassaday, J. Scott Campbell, and Stephen Segovia. As Barrucci explained, Ross is more than just a cover artist. "Alex Ross actually designed the Kevin Smith Green Hornet look. It's going to be the son of Britt Reid and this really is going to be a tragic tale, it's really leading into bigger things. Alex was excited that we were working with Kevin and gave it his all. I really can't express how grateful I am that Alex threw himself in here."

While Smith is a phenomenally popular writer, his prior deadline problems have marred some of his projects. Barrucci said that this will not be a problem with this series, however. " We already have Kevin's scripts for the entire series in house; we were basically able to work the movie script into the comic script. It's the movie no one has ever seen, but they'll be able to see it in our comic. As far as the art is concerned, Jonathan has always handed in his books on time, so we're good to go there."

"One of the other assets Jonathan brings to the table is his reliability," Rybandt said. "He's a consummate professional who's able to hit his deadlines and deliver stunning work all at the same time."

The advance art indicates that Kato has undergone a gender change. What led to that decision, and how does it impact the Green Hornet-Kato dynamic? "The gender change is all part of the progression of Kevin's story," Barrucci said. "There's certainly an element of tension between the Green Hornet and Kato as the two characters get to know each other. The best way I can equate it is that, in Kevin's movie script, the dynamics of the characters are reminiscent of the Batman and Robin series Grant Morrison is doing, where you see the tension of the Dick Grayson Batman and the new Robin, Damien getting to know each other and work together for the first time. You're going to see the building of their relationship."

As far as the changes are concerned, "I think we've proven that we can take classic characters and update them respectfully while still adding new modern elements that bring the character up to date," Rybandt said.

While Smith's story is based on his film script, Barrucci pointed out that this will be the first time that script has been seen. "It's absolutely amazing that Kevin's script hasn't shown up on the internet or for sale anywhere, as most scripts end up getting bootlegged. I mean, think about it. He entrusted us with his baby! This is something that he put his heart and soul in to, and never allowed it to be seen just to be seen. He only allowed it to be put in our comic. I've said it before, and I'll say it again—I'm honored and blessed. Especially considering the writing is so reverent and it's compelling. And I think fans will agree."

Kevin Smith's ten-part story not only launches the Green Hornet series, it launches an entire Green Hornet franchise, with two other books in the works, with Matt Wagner and Brett Matthews writing the other two books. "The others start before and after Kevin's book," Barrucci said. "In many ways, Kevin's Green Hornet is the linchpin, if for no other reason than he's first and he's Kevin Smith, and his involvement will build awareness for all the other series."

Dynamite has the Green Hornet license... and they also have the Lone Ranger license. Since Britt Reid was originally presented as a descendant of the Lone Ranger, is there any chance of some sort of a crossover tale further down the line? "We've been asked this a bunch of times," Rybandt said, "and for anyone reading the Lone Ranger, you'll see that seeds have been planted and yes, we hope to fully connect those dots. That said, we're focusing on getting Kevin's whole story out into the world before we dive into something like this."

The Green Hornet #1, a $3.99 comic by Kevin Smith & Jonathan Lau with covers by Alex Ross, John Cassaday, J. Scott Campbell, and Stephen Segovia, is slated for March release.
